

Dear Sir/Madam,

I am concerned about my Rights to use whatever Natural Therapies I want to. I don't think it's the TGA's job to limit Australian's Freedom of Choice.

Unfortunately, the information to be used by the TGA will no doubt be based on NHMRC reporting, a flawed and biased source.

I prefer OPTION 1, of those available. At least it leaves Homeopathy available, with limited restrictions. The other options are open to further regulation.

I can't understand why, when Sweden and Switzerland, for example are moving towards homeopathy, (and Brazil, India, Germany, Portugal, Belgium already recognize it.... And don't forget Great Britain.. in fact ask the Queen if her family uses it), Australia seems to be lagging behind 15 years again and is moving away from it. Anything that keeps the Medicare bill minimized should be embraced with enthusiasm, and encouragement.

My concern is that there is little funding for research to justify homeopathy, so that is seen, by many, as proof that it doesn't work. Drug companies with their huge budgets, and warped findings, and lobbyists can win out over centuries of experience and empirical evidence.
