

In regards to proposed changes to the way homeopathic medicines are regulated that has the potential to dramatically affect the availability of homeopathic medicines in Australia:

As a regular user who benefits a lot from homeopathic medicine as all other medicine seem to evoke side effects, I would like to ask that the regulations for homeopathic medicine remain as they currently are.

If necessary higher scientific evidence can be required for high therapeutic claims, however as homeopathic medicine does no harm and causes no known side effects I do not believe this would be essential. I feel that any changes to regulations affecting homeopathic and other complementary medicine would be damaging to people in certain circumstances of health.

Thank you for taking this submission into consideration.
