

I have always thought that Australians had much more common sense than exists back in the UK but it seems that once again vested interest is getting in the way of good quality holistic healthcare. I strongly object to Options 3 and 4 on the grounds that bias is at work here and these options would remove not only a safe choice for citizens but put talented, knowledgeable people out of work/prevent professionals working in their preferred field. There is plenty of good quality research now available in the field on homeopathy (and 200 years of clinical experience). Option 1 would be my preferred option.
