

I am a patient under homeopathic treatment for the last 8 months. I have experienced major improvements in my health and wellbeing since then and I would like to have the option to carry on using homeopathy in Australia.

The Homeopathic Medicine is used worldwide, is recognised as a therapeutic treatment by the World Health Organisation, and it is in line with the new model of quantum health (Einsteinian model) that has finally started to be applied to Biology.

I do hope Australia can follow the examples of Switzerland, where Homeopathy shares the same status as conventional medicine in terms of health insurance, and India, where Homeopathy is totally integrated with conventional medicine.

I highly believe that we should have freedom of choice when it comes to decide for our therapeutic treatment and do hope Homeopathy will soon become integrated into the conventional health and health insurance systems.

I therefore strongly support option 1 and option 2, which maintain Homeopathy regulated the way it currently is but requires scientific evidence for higher level claims.

On the other hand, I strongly oppose options 3 and 4.
