Re: Consultation: Options for the future regulation of 'low risk' products

I have been a long-time consumer and recipient of homeopathic consultations and remedies. This has occurred around the world as I have lived in many countries.

I have not come across the like of the TGA's objections to homeopathy, especially in the light of their inclination to support flawed research papers and lack of peer reviewed evidence. This is a disgraceful lack of due diligence.

I should like, in particular, to object to the TGA's option calling for "Declare homeopathic products NOT to be therapeutic goods". I consider this option to be against all reasonable alternative therapy practices and, indeed, to be antithetical in the practice of freedom to choose.

There are many countries in the world where homeopathy is practised safely and with good safeguards and treatment protocols in place. Why on earth would Australia allow itself to be coerced by a vested interest authority into believing otherwise.

Yours faithfully
