

Option 4 – Declare homeopathic products NOT to be therapeutic goods.

Not only is homeopathy proven to be ineffective, it's dangerous, especially when used as a substitute for approved treatments with a good record.

As the TGA would be aware, an analysis of more than 200 academic research papers has concluded that homeopathy is not an effective treatment for any disease or condition. The study was conducted by the National Health and Medical Research Council in Australia, and the value of the individual studies was appraised by an independent company to prevent bias.

Homeopathy has been discredited by academic studies in the past, and the recent findings have led scientists to once more urge consumers and vendors to reconsider buying and selling the ineffective and potentially dangerous remedies, especially in place of treatments with proven efficacy.
